June, a curious explorer with a heart full of kindness, loved venturing into the vibrant jungle. Today, the air was warm and smelled of exotic flowers, perfect for a new adventure. As she walked, listening to the chirping birds, June suddenly heard a soft, unfamiliar sound.

Peeking through some enormous green leaves, June found a tiny baby elephant, all alone. He had big, floppy ears and was whimpering softly, tears welling in his large, dark eyes. June's kind heart felt a pang of sadness for the lost little one.

“Don’t worry, little one,” June whispered softly, offering a gentle smile. “We’ll find your family!” She looked around carefully, her explorer’s eyes scanning the ground. Then, she spotted them: enormous, fresh footprints pressed into the soft, muddy earth.

“These must be your mama’s!” June exclaimed, and the baby elephant gave a happy little squeak. Together, they began to follow the big prints, deeper into the jungle. As they walked, June thought she heard a faint, distant trumpet sound carried on the breeze.

The trumpet sound grew louder, a strong and loving call. The baby elephant twitched his ears and sped up, knowing that sound! June knew they were very close now. Soon, they could see a shimmering mist rising above the trees, a dear sign of a large waterfall.

Following the sound and the mist, they finally reached a magnificent waterfall, cascading into a sparkling river. And there she was! The baby elephant's mama, a grand and gentle giant, waiting patiently. The baby elephant trumpeted joyfully and rushed into his mama's loving embrace.

Mama Elephant turned her wise eyes to June and gently touched June's hand with her trunk, a soft rumble of gratitude. The baby elephant nudged June's leg, his little trunk tickling her arm. June giggled, feeling so happy to have helped.

With a final wave and a promise to visit, June said goodbye to her new elephant friends. As she walked back through the jungle, her heart felt full of warmth and pride. She had gone on an amazing adventure and helped a lost friend find his way home. What a wonderful day!
